Ticket to Paradise Cherie Claire

Lizzy Guidry is having the worst day of her life, thanks to newspaperman Martin Taylor, whose editorial has raised the ire of Lizzy's boss, the mayor of Santa Helena, California. Martin is on the verge of losing his newspaper, which is why he's buying yet another lottery ticket the night he runs into Lizzy. Still fuming, Lizzy beats him to it, nabbing the last ticket before the machines close. Topping off Martin's worst day, Lizzy's ticket wins. Only she doesn't know it.

As Martin attempts to romance his way to five million dollars, will he lose his heart in the process? Will they both realize that love, more than money, is the ticket to paradise?

Meg says

An interesting story, with various sub plots, which I enjoyed reading. The situations and characters drew me into the tale, and I was rooting for them all. It's a good sign when you want to shout to one of the characters and tell them what to do!

Isabella says

After initially struggling to get involved at the start, the story develops smoothly and plausibly and the hero's gradual shift from pecuniary interest to love for the heroine feels sweet and real.

Amanda Williams says

Sweet romance

I liked this book. It was a sweet story. The heroine was from Louisiana, which is where my family was from, so it brought back good memories.

Victoria says

It is a great book to read

Vevo says

I have had no expectations for this book. It was a very good surprise.
Well done Martin's change of heart

The minute we meet Lizzie Guidry and Martin Taylor, they hate each other so much that you just know they're going to wind up together at the end of the book. She works for the mayor; he's a newspaper publisher -- who just happens to refer to Lizzie as the "mayor's pooper-scooper" in an editorial. Yep, that's an auspicious beginning.

We soon learn that Martin's newspaper is in dire financial straits ... and that Lizzie has a winning lottery ticket (although she doesn't know it yet) stuck to the front of her fridge with a magnet. Because Martin knows it's a winning ticket (view spoiler), he decides that pretending to be interested in Lizzie will be a good way to convince her to part with some of the money to help him out.

This book is riddle with editorial errors, like Martin "exhuming charm" instead of exuding it -- although I suppose he could be trying to dig it up after it's died. Lizzie also "balls her eyes out" instead of bawling, and she spends a lot of time "starring" at things instead of staring. The author also can't seem to decide whether Lizzie has auburn hair or brown hair ... and the two are not interchangeable.

And yet, I kept reading ... because I was curious about how the author would resolve the matter of the lotto ticket. Toward the end of the book, I was really sorry I did. Martin and Lizzie actually start to develop feelings for each other, and one night when she is inebriated she makes a confession to Martin about her lack of experience in the bedroom. (view spoiler)

Anyway, everything winds up resolved some far too convenient ways, and I spent the rest of the book ticked off at both of the main characters.

I just can't recommend this book.

InD'tale Magazine says

This is a sweet tale of two people down on their luck and out of hope, but who finally find both in one another.

Read full review in the 2016 October issue of InD'tale Magazine.

Anne Turnley says

Complex story

Will winning the lottery solve their problems? Both Martin and Lizzy need money but, only one of them can get a lottery ticket before closing. Getting to know each other maybe better than winning.
