Economic crisis was just a cover-up for a meticulously planned world division. By 2032, the world was unrecognizable: three types of countries were established according to their level of education, economy, technological achievements, capabilities, and innovations. Names of the countries were replaced by corresponding numbers—first ten were rich, eleven to thirty advanced, and the rest were poor.

Twenty-seven year old Stella lived in Country 189 that was proclaimed as a country of lazy, stupid, and arrogant people. Not being any of that, and in the midst of raging unemployment and poverty, she saw her chance to survive by working on a conveyor belt for her country's new owner—the Global REN Company. Unfortunately, her fellow countrymen were true examples of her country's status, so when they found out that androids were top executives in Global REN, all hell broke loose, slowly paving the way for a world war.

A decision to help the CEO, Chris Nicholson, when no-one would, gave her an opportunity to work as his assistant, and to experience the world on the other side of the barrier—the world she would have never seen as the poor country citizen. Emotionally and in business, their lives entangled, taking them in a completely unexpected direction.

Stella found love and happiness. Chris was everything she ever wanted in a man, and he loved her dearly. But life sometimes plays morbid games...What was supposed to be a fairy-tale ending, now was a nightmare.

The war took her everything, especially a reason to live. Coping with grief and anger, barely staying alive, life once again plays a morbid game.

To save her brother, she is forced to accept help from an enemy—arrogant and overconfident James from Country 90.

But life has one more game to play with Stella. This time it may not be so cruel...

Placed in a dystopian hell, with constant suspense, eased by tender love, and embittered by terrible losses; this book will take you on a journey of human barriers.

This story had me going from happy to sad to happy quite a few times. Stella is a young female living with her parent in a country that doesn't care very much about them. She is hardworking and educated with a good heart. Even though her situation is depressing she still has morals and Ethics. She is a strong young female that is thrown in so many heartbreaking situations. Yet they can not break her she grows into a strong adult and she gets a second chance for love.

I was close to tears, my heart was jumping for joy, I was sadden....this story had me on a roller coaster with all the feelings I went though. I loved it. I like stories that have my heart pumping and my emotions going. So well described that I can see the county where she lived the county where she got to visit with Chris and then with James and Mark. I can see the ghetto and those in the rich countries.

I loved Chris; he was so thoughtful, rich and cute. I wish it could have been a little different for him in the story. I am glad that Stella got to meet him but was very surprised that the story did a 360 on their relationship. Didn't see that coming!

I highlighted a lot in this story, something I normal do not do, a lot of the passages jumped out at me. Such as "They cost us our jobs! They took all important jobs in the country, and look where we are now" & "Men volunteered to go to war, proud to be able to defend their county, and soon after, the country drafted all the rest" it sounds so close to home with the immigration issue and the war overseas.

I truly enjoyed this story very much it's a keeper. Fast past with a lot of action and romance. Thanks to the author for providing me with a e-copy of the story for an honest review.

The main idea of this book is an intresting one, however, it needs to be fleshed our a bit. More detail need to be added to the characters so that you find yourself caring about what is happening to them. A good start and with a little editing help could be another dystopian story
