Shattered Soul Jennifer Snyder
Hellish Nightmare.

If Seth Bradson were to describe his life, those would be the two words he would choose. Preferring to cope with his crappy existence and horrible home life by spending his days in a drug-induced haze, Seth coasts through life. Until the moment his path crosses with Ali Carson. In her, Seth finds something he's been subconsciously seeking—a new drug, one that consumes his mind unlike any other.

Love.

But when Seth finds himself in a situation he could have never foreseen, and foolishly allows Ali to try his most addictive temptation—crystal meth—the unraveling of both their lives occurs before his very eyes, forcing Seth to learn the definition of the word regret the hard way.

(Mature Young Adult - contains explicit drug usage, language, violence, and sexual situations.)

Author interview at NightlyReading:
<http://nightlyreading.wordpress.com/2...>

I had started this book and did not stop until finished. Since it is a short read, it only took me a couple of hours, but I was addicted to finishing the story of Seth and Ali. I had wanted to read this book for a while now and once I had it in my hot little hands, I could not resist temptation. I had to start it.

The Storyline.....

I can only sum up this story in one word....gripping! Ms. Snyder took a story and wove it into one that anyone could understand. You did not have to be an addict to feel for the characters. These are occurrences that happen every day around the world. Probably more often than we know or hear of. I just could not put this book down once I started reading.

The Characters.....

Really this story saddened me as I watched these characters that could be so full of life, wither away to nothing and waste their lives away to feel a chemical happiness. I loved Seth. As much as he seemed like a coward, he really was stronger than he gave himself credit for. Ali was so sweet and pure that it made me wonder if people really do get hooked that easily?

In Conclusion.....

This was a heartbreaking read for me, it really hits home when you have an addict in the family. So many nights waiting and wondering where they are or what they were doing. This book literally left me in tears and the ending will shock you. This is not your typical addiction story since both the main characters are addicts and it was interesting to see how quickly things change when one addict is trying to sober up and the other is going off the deep end!

Once Upon a Twilight says

Seth is a very sad soul. His alcoholic mother doesn't care about him or what he does, his brother beats him up and is a major drug head. He is in love with a girl (Ali) that he feels is totally out of reach and has a cop for a Dad! A lot of this book takes place in Seth's head, but that actually makes this book quite interesting. Seth knows that the path that he is going down is headed for trouble. It is headed for a life like his mother and his brother. He knows that he does not want this for himself. However, he is unsure of how to change it and maybe just go about life as he only knows.

This story tells of a boy who only knows bad, but whose girlfriend tries to right his wrongs. Shattered Soul is masterful at making you feel Seth's raw feelings and brings you right into his head with a roller coaster of emotions and affections. Gut wrenching indeed. Seth allows his girlfriend to try crystal meth, one mistake that he will never forget. Their lives begin to spiral into a whirlwind like they never imagined. Regret and fear instantly flood into his mind. Will she make it through? Will he be able to hold on to her if she does?

If you like a story that is true to life and very realistic, Shattered Soul is the book for you. Many ups and downs, pushes and pulls and yes, I did tear up a few times. Even though I did not have that type of an upbringing, I can see how children in today's society can easily get wrapped up into this type of lifestyle. Great writing Jennifer Snyder, I will definitely be a repeat customer!

"Life's a bitch, and then you die."

Shattered Soul is such a tragic, heart wrenching, make you ugly cry story. It was either going to be an epic fail for me or I was going to cry, I cried. If you think Shattered Soul is going to be some super happy story, turn around and don't look back because that's not what you're getting. My sister is a recovering meth addict and I can't explain to you how disgusting the drug is or how it's truly like a tornado that rips families apart. My sister fortunately was strong enough to pull herself out of it and became a stronger person, not everyone is though. Seth Bradson is like your typical high school stoner, he has a crappy life and copes with it the only way he knows how.

"This was how I dealt with my life. Every time I snorted a line, popped a pill, or smoked a bowl I was dealing with it, coping with it the only way I knew how."

It is so incredibly sad to know how true this statement is in our world today, to see Seth destroy himself because he didn't know how to cope with his dead beat dad, alcoholic mother, and psycho brother broke my heart. I wanted so bad to tell him to just stop, to get help before it was too late. To pull himself out of the world before he was really, truly in it but I obviously couldn't because he's fictional. When Ali Carson walks into his life that's when shit really hits the fan. Every time she would park in his driveway and wait for him to come back outside I would be sitting there freaking out because I was afraid of what Seth would walk into or how she would get involved because you can tell she obviously does by the synopsis. Ali made me emotional, like cry so much I needed tissues emotional. The things both her and Seth have been through are really tragic and I loved how Jennifer showed it doesn't matter if you have a perfect family on the outside, if you have both parents or one, if you are rich or poor, anyone can become addicted to meth for whatever reason. To see Ali get sucked into this world and watch what happened afterward ripped my heart to shreds. It was like Jennifer just took it and threw it in a wood chipper, no coming back.

To say this is a must read in my book is an understatement, I loved how Jennifer displayed the world of meth and its affects. I loved how emotional she made me get, I probably was a bit more than most because of my personal experience but you'll get emotional either way. I loved how she crafted Seth and Ali and built up their relationship and then showed us exactly what meth can do to one. How desperate meth can make people and how it really does tear people's lives apart. I highly recommend you read this book and remember to bring your tissues. Seriously.

From the blurb, this may sound like a similar premise to a lot of YA books out there.

But the ending?

You won't see it coming.

At all!

Well written and well edited!

Nice debut from this author, I look forward to reading more!

SPOILS THE END I gave this book four stars even though I only want to give it one. I didn't like this book at all but it wouldn't be fair to the author to get a bad review because the book wasn't what I was expecting. I realized with the title and subject matter it wasn't going to be a peaches and cream kind of book. The book was everything everyone else previous to me mentioned but I read to escape my problems and this book quite frankly depressed the s out of me. I like the happily ever after. I don't want to discourage people from reading this book because this is such a big problem with our children (and society) today and we can't keep our blinders on about it. Very well written book. The author evoked every feeling she sought from the reader and that is a testament of great writing.

"Life. Life's a b*h and then you die. So, fk the world and let's get high."

Shattered Soul is a book about drugs and how everything can get worse in just one second.

Seth's life was never easy. Between his drunk mother and drug dealer brother all Seth knows is that his life is never going to get better.

Even if i liked how sometimes Seth thought i have to admit that i hoped that maybe something will change and the book won't be like how it started until the end.

I'm not a big fan of drugs and i think that books like this one are a lesson for everyone- especially when things are worse than everyone think.

"Until she came into my life, which was when things began to change for me."

When Seth first saw Ali Carson his life changed ,but not exactly how i expected. Just a little bit.

I knew that nobody could make Seth to stop using drugs and i hated that everything got complicated after that.

Ali Carson was an innocent girl whose life was almost perfect-that if i don't count the fact that she had to move from place to place because of her parents. At the beginning i liked her and i was glad that she was interested in Seth. I hoped that maybe she will help him, but I was wrong.

Once you are addicted...

This story wasn't very nice. So much violence and of course drugs. Between those things even if I want to see the good parts I can't - at least some of them I could. Those were the moments when Ali and Seth first started to hang out together. It was a nice beginning..but everything has an end.

Jennifer wrote something that could happen in real life every day. I admire her for writing a story like this because she is sending a message to everyone about how life could be for us if we had a life like Seth. A story you could learn something from.

"Life's a bitch and then you die. So, fuck the world and let's get high."

The title fits this novel so, so much! When I agreed to read this for a review, I seriously thought I knew what I'm putting myself into, but damn, my heart was definitely shattered after reading this book.

I'm not new to this drug addiction theme since I've been writing my research paper since high school with this as my topic, but reading about it and making it seem like it is more real and part of someone's life, plus Snyder's amazing talent in making such words blow so hard, that it affects its readers.

I was first confused with Ali's personality. Being the new kid, she gives me the impression of being a good girl, not saint-like but still good. Then all of a sudden, she gives hints to Seth about popping pills and 'having fun,' which contradicts to that good girl image she has on my mind. But after a while, I mean after having some fun, I got used to it and was okay with her acting wild.

What broke my heart were her actions towards Seth. A part of the blame is on Seth, it's pretty obvious, but I hated how she acted towards him and how she keeps on ruining her life on her own that caused hurting those people who cares about her. I had this crazy nausea while reading this book, waiting for the next bad thing to happen and it felt worse after reading it. What she did to Seth in the end was just low. It was goddamn low, no matter how much she wanted that goddamn meth. Maybe this nausea wasn't just because of the story but also because of what she did.

This book is something to be taken seriously. It's heart-wrenching and really depressing but it was really good. I have to say that it was very well-written because of all the emotions it gave me while and after reading this book.

To those who are planning to read this, approach with caution but never back down.

Don't let the cover fool you. This is not a happy book. In fact, it's soul shattering. Yep, the title basically says it all. Now I know what you might be thinking, "If this is not a happy book then why did you read it, Sab? Why are you reviewing it? What's the point?"

Well, the point is this: It's a book. You don't just read a book because it has a HEA. You read a book because of the journey it takes you on - happy or sad. And this book definitely took me on a journey.

Shattered Soul was a short read (I finished it in about 3 hours). But even if it was, Snyder managed to create a story filled with so much raw emotion and characters that felt so real.

I liked that this was written in Seth's perspective - a male protagonist at last! He's so complex, it hurts. Seriously, that's how I felt the whole time I was reading his story. There were two sides to him and it hurt seeing how he struggled with trying to get away from the life he knows. And to make matters worse, his brother Calvin is a total asshole. Whenever he's in a scene, my blood would boil. At one point, at the height of Calvin's douchebaggery, I totally cursed my tablet and wanted to smash it against a wall. I was that mad. And I felt so sorry for Seth that I actually cried with him.

Then we have Ali... she's complicated. I feel like on some level I knew Ali but then again maybe it's just her drug-induced personality that we were introduced to. It was so hard trying to see what Seth saw in her other than the fact that she's beautiful. I kind of feel like Ali was only after Seth because she knew he had the goods. And that she didn't really change because of the addiction... maybe she really was that underneath all the cute preppy outfits. Get what I'm saying? Whatever. Bottomline, Ali was the biggest game changer in Seth's life and I don't even mean that in a good way.

The story overall, is great. Like I said, not because of the ending (because it's not a happy one) but because of the journey it takes to get there. It deals with a sensitive topic and I think the author did a great job at writing about the reality of it all. There's truly something about Jennifer Snyder's writing that draws me in. This is the second book of hers I've read and I can definitely say she has a way with words. She brings out a whole lot of emotions without saying too much.

Shattered Soul is edgy and dark and all around fantastic! I'd definitely recommend this to any reader who's up for the challenge. It won't be easy... but it is so worth it.

Crudo y real

La historia de este libro pasa más a menudo de lo que se quisiera.

La autora tiene una forma de contarla bastante curiosa no te da ni el tiempo ni la profundidad para querer a Ali pero a pesar de eso la tristeza por como termina es real.

Autumn Review says

Ok, so I was hesitant to read the book for one reason, it's sad. However, I'm glad I did even though I was tense and emotional throughout. It is a dark book with disturbing situations, but JS has such an incredible ability to give you an almost virtual reading experience. I felt like I was with Seth throughout the whole book. I could picture what he looked like, where he was, what he was doing, and I felt like I could feel his pain. I literally wanted to reach through and pull him out to help him. He's not just some druggie kid looking to get high. This is the only life he knows and doesn't have a clue how to get out of it. Yes, it's a story about Seth and Ali, but the real story to me was Seth and how one simple decision can affect your life so traumatically. I knew this book would have no happy ending, so I had to come away with the story of a boy, looking to find his way through life and love. Once I thought of it that way, I was able to digest the difficult subject matter of the book.

Tracey (Life and Literature) says

This was how I dealt with my life. Every time I snorted a line, popped a pill, or smoked a bowl I was dealing with it, coping with it the only way I knew how.

OH. MY. GOD. My poor, poor heart!!! Why do I do it to myself? Why do I read these books that send me on such an emotional roller coaster? I'll tell you why. Because despite my heart getting ripped to shreds, I love books like this. Books that scream reality. Books that you can picture so clearly in your head. Books that make you think. Books that make you feel. Let me tell you, Shattered Soul ticked every one of those boxes and then some!!

And I wasn't just some bad boy who was nothing but a punk kid looking for trouble. I was raised around trouble and because of it, I was troubled to the very core.

To say that Seth has a tough life would be an understatement. In fact it's incredibly crappy!!! Although his mother is there physically, she offers nothing of what a mother should. He receives no love and no care whatsoever. But he has his older brother to take care of him right? Wrong!! His brother is a bigger disaster than his mum. Calvin is an addicted drug dealer. He is controlling to the extreme and takes great pleasure in the pain that he causes Seth.

And so Seth seeks to numb that pain and take refuge from his life with a mix of drugs. And then Ali enters his life. Seth sees her beauty and her goodness and knows that there is no way someone like her could ever be interested in him. But they start spending time together and she makes Seth want to be a better, stronger person. But Maybe Ali's life isn't as perfect as it looks.

I absolutely loved Seth. Did I find him swoony? Hell yes!! But more than that, I wanted to hug him and have him as part of my family so that he could experience all the things he should have experienced but missed out on. I wanted to offer him comfort and show him that there is good in the world. I wanted to protect and care for him. And I wanted him to not think so little of himself. He was capable of so much good and had so much love to give.

Being around Ali had become intoxicating. She had become my new drug of choice, the one that I preferred above all others.

I loved that Ali could see the good in Seth. I loved that she brought some happiness to his life. But there were times when I wanted to shake some sense into her. And then the next minute I wanted to help her and stop her from heading down the path she was on.

This book shows how quickly addiction can take hold. How even though you may think that you can handle and control it, it doesn't work that way. Before you know it you're in too deep.

Shattered Soul is not a fluffy read despite there being moments of light. It is deep and there is darkness, but it is a book that you won't be able to put down. Jennifer Snyder is an exceptional storyteller. A truly amazing book!!!

5/5, gripping, heart wrenching, soul shattering stars!!!

Jagged says

I stopped reading this book half way through but then I decided I would just finish it even though it wasn't doing anything for me.

First of all, it's one thing to describe the horrible repercussions of doing drugs and it is another to encourage it. And quite honestly, most of this book was spent encouraging drug use. And that was just damn horrible. It was portrayed as the way to deal with horrible life choices and horrible circumstances, but also as a way to celebrate and have fun--but acceptable. I was so very not okay with that.

I'm glad there were some serious consequences to end this book but even then it wasn't something that touched my heart at all. The reflection wasn't complete. And the writing wasn't very impressive. I certainly would not recommend this book to teens.

Nikki (Wicked Awesome Books) says

Be warned, Shattered Soul is not a happy-go-lucky story. If you didn't get that from the title alone, then take it from me; this book is gritty and raw, with heavy drug usage by and around the main character Seth.

Despite all that, Seth is almost a sweet guy. He's in a difficult situation – his father ditched the family, his mother is an alcoholic, and his brother is both addicted to and deals drugs. Seth likes to drown the world out with weed and has, on occasion, hit the harder stuff.

Yet he's good at his core. Seth is easy to connect to, even if the reader has no personal experience with the kind of life he has. The beginning starts off a bit rough because we meet Seth who, at first glance, appears to be a stoner kid with no aspirations. Once we see him a bit more and see where he comes from and what he wants from his life, the connection to him becomes solid. Seth does not want to be his mom or his brother, but he doesn't know how to stop himself from going down that path.

Ali, the girl that could very well turn Seth around, isn't fleshed out completely, but she doesn't need to be. She's the spark that lights the fire for him, making him want to be different, even if he hasn't figured out how. At times, I wanted to hold Seth and hug him and hide him from the destructive people in his life; other times, I wanted to throttle him because he was so stupid and I couldn't believe he was doing what he was doing; then something would happen and I'd want to protect him again.

That is the beauty in what Jennifer Snyder's debut evokes. This tortuous story of a teenager living in a hellhole is unrelenting in its portrayal of suburban drug life and how quickly addiction takes hold, escalates, and destroys everything and everyone it comes in contact with. Shattered Soul is gut-wrenching and affecting, taking the reader on a rollercoaster of ups, downs, and has an ending that no one will ever see coming.

RO Mejia says

Seth Bradson is a teenager, who walks around with a disheveled appearance, shaggy brown hair, and as he puts it, "muddy brown eyes." Seth goes every day to school in wrinkled clothing, baggy shorts with holes in them, and doesn't care what he looks like. He is being brought up, (if you can call it that), in a house with a drunken mother, and his half-baked, drug dealing, sadistic, controlling, scumbag brother, Calvin. He fears his brother's wrath, is disgusted by his lack of ethics, but does what he's told, and watches his mouth. His brother gets him to sell drugs for him at school. He does it without a fight. Seth knows no other life. He only knows that his life stinks, and that it's in his genes, because his brother told him his father was a drug dealer, that ingested his own drugs, like Calvin. His father left when Seth was three, and from that point on his mother worked till he was 11. Then, his mother slowly began drinking herself to death. Seth goes to bed every night with a bowl of marijuana, and wakes up every morning with a drug hangover. At other times of day, and, or night, he ingests pills, and inhales Crystal Meth, at his brother's intimidation. Seth's motto is, "Life's a bitch, and then you die." This is his life, until he meets, Ali Carson, "his angel," that makes him want more out of his life. Ali has long tanned legs, huge blue eyes, and a gorgeous smile. She is beautiful, innocent, and trusting. She comes from a well to do family, the complete opposite of Seth's.

The beginning of every day starts the same for Seth. He showers, walks down the hall, and searches through the left over cigarette butts, (of his brother and his friends, from the night before), for a decent butt to smoke. As Seth makes his way down the hall, I do too. The smell of cigarettes, and smoke, fills my lungs, he proceeds to the ashtray filled with ashes and soot, and I can smell the pungent odor of the stale cigarettes through my nostrils, and feel the grit that he feels on his fingers. My stomach begins to turn, as I read Ms. Snyder's descriptions. She has a way of making me feel everything, as I am reading it. The pain Seth feels for never having a mother that really cares for him, or stands up for him, is heart- wrenching. This book is a complete 360 from the prior novella I reviewed of Ms. Snyder's, The Hereafter. Yet, she pulls it off, and does a great job!

This novel is not pretty. It made me reel, with a roller coaster of emotions. I feel that this book should be displayed in every school, and be a part of the required reading. This is a book that will teach kids the dangers of drugs, the facts about how fast addiction can happen, and the fact that whether you're a good person, or a bad person, rich or poor, the end result could cost you your life. Seth and Ali both grew as individuals, yet, not in the same direction. After completing this novel, it left a hole in my heart, and an overwhelming sadness. Get your kleenex ready, because readers, you will be crying all day long!!!

Ms. Snyder spins a web of love, euphoria, adulation, danger, hostility, and rage. She has got a special gift for making the reader feel everything she has written. By the end of this book, you will feel empty, and depleted. It drained me emotionally, and will have me thinking about it for a very long time to come.

I give this novel 4 smoke filled, drug induced, Heart Breaking, panic stricken Stars!
