Did no one ever buy Enid 'A Book Of Baby Names' for her Birthday? She needed it! More of the same names in this book but just as enjoyable as other books in the Popular rewards series. This one has not been hit with the pc stick as smacking as a punishment is still in here. If you didn't read Enid as a child I'm not sure you'd get much from it but if you did, it's a nice trip down memory lane :)

Connor says

A boy has his silver cups stolen and goes out to find them hidden in ditches he never finds the last one or the person.

One of many Enid Blyton story collections I had as a young child, and probably one of my favourites. Sometimes I find Blyton (as most mid-20th Century kids' writers) a little heavy-handed with the punishments and moral lessons, but for the most part these are sweet, whimsical stories that gently remind kids to be kind to one another, responsible, and grateful for what they have. Good reminders in the 40s when this was originally written, and still good in the 21st Century.

Twelve silver cups are short stories they have She couldn't tell the time - he lost his tail- blackberry tart - the bonfire folk- the old toad and the spider- Sally simple's matches - twelve silver cups - the cracker fairies- salt on a birds tail- the magic motor car there are lots of other stories to. My favourite book is Mother minky's trick it's about this old lady named mother minky and she's a good cook one day someone steals some of her cakes that are drying on the window sill. So mother minky decides to catch the thief. This is how she did it next time she made cakes she put in a blue nose spell whoever ate these cakes would have a blue nose in 6 hours. Then she invited everyone in the village to the party she didn't bring the cakes with the blue nose spell in it to the party instead she left them on the window sill.
