Malcolm says, "I liked the whole book and all the challenges and that Bumi was Bumi and that Aang said he was a mad genius and that he chose the king."

Samantha says

The Gaang visits the great Earth Kingdom city of Omashu for Aang to relive some of his old memories. However, the destruction they accidentally cause gets them sent before the King. Katara's and Sokka's lives are put on the line, and the only way for Aang to save them is to succeed in the three tasks the crazy king gives him. Time is running out.

Same complaints as always—the artwork and the script are taken from the show, and the few changes made don't add anything to this story.

Errors:

Page 22, "From the looks of your friends, I'd say you have about half an hour." No. In the show, it's "a few minutes". Granted, it seems like more than a few minutes passes in the show, but... not a half hour.

In Avatar the Last Airbender Volume 5, Aang, Katara, and Sokka arrive in the city of Omashu. Here Aang shows his friends how he used to slide down the packaging system in the city. The three of them get caught and are taken to the King of Omashu. In order to regain their freedom Aang must perform three tests. But Aang is under a strict time limit, the King has forced Katara and Sokka to wear "creeping crystal" rings that grow and will cover them both in crystal by nightfall.

This graphic novel is nothing out of the ordinary. It has the typical word bubbles, gutters and sound effects. Some of the panels overlap and some of the pictures and sound effects come out of the panel. This book is directed toward a younger audience around elementary age. It is a manga story based upon the T.V. show.
