Lost Princess Anfal Khaliq

Bella wanted to run away from reality. Nothing at school was going well, or at home for that matter. So she decided to escape to the world of The Internet, where she could pretend about everything and make virtual friends instead.

Meeting White Knight online turned her life around. It was going so well, until he started getting personal, and he decided ... that he wanted to meet her. Bella didn't see the harm in doing so, but there were unexpected dangers lurking ...

Susana Santos says

This is super simple but super creepy in a sense that it could happen to any of us. I did this once but I got lucky, the girl I met was who she said she was.

I was always scared when I was reading this because of the danger of this mundane thing. 2 out of 5 but if I have a kid I'll show her/him this. And besides, I couldn't have wrote it better.

Keeps you aware of the dangers online!

Kevis Hendrickson says

I thought this was an interesting short story for teens. It takes a modern, but fairly well used concept of two strangers meeting online and shows the dangers of it. I especially like that it was told from the viewpoints of the two main characters.

There's nothing really new here. The story is what you would expect for this type of tale where a young girl (11 years old) decides to start up an online relationship with a stranger who isn't what he presents himself to be. For starters, he's twice her age and has sinister intentions, but hides his true age behind a false identity.

This story had the ingredients to become something special, but I feel it ends too quickly and way before anything really interesting starts to happen. As the author for this novel is quite young, I'd love to see her revisit this short story a few years later when she's gained more experience and add some more meat to the story. Overall, Lost Princess is a good read with a positive message. I just wish there was more to it.
