I laughed so hard I cried. And everything in the book about the grotesque face of celebrity worship has rung more true with each passing year.

Her 1851 poem “Casa Guidi Windows” describes in two parts Italy’s growing Risorgimento, unification movement, and it’s intensifying struggle for nationhood against the foreign powers who administered her fate and kept her looking like a jigsaw puzzle on the maps.

The poem made her an instant hero in Italy, but it was poorly received abroad, where commentators felt female poets should stick to love sonnets and eschew politics. Only later, and mainly by female writers, was the poem’s beauty and passion appreciated.

I think everyone should pick up a collection of poems from this author. They stand the test of time and paint beautiful pictures in the readers minds.

Some of her works were great and that is why I give it 4 stars, but there are quite a few that left me baffled.

Laura says

We only read two of EBB's works for my Victorian Poetry seminar: Sonnets From the Portuguese and Aurora Leigh. I was surprised by how much I enjoyed the Sonnets - beautiful, heartbreakin, and very touching. Aurora Leigh was less enjoyable, but still very pretty. I'm happy to report that I like EBB!
