Great short story

This is a great short story. It is packed with everything that a good romance should have in a compact book.

These short novellas are spoiling me. A cute little story with romance, humor and apprehension to keep one happy, laughing and wondering. Mitch and Courtney were darling characters, each wondering if the other felt as they did. I thoroughly enjoy the relationships that start out friendly, teasing and comfortable and then turn into something more with some silent questioning on both parts as they go. To get this much enjoyment out from so little time is a joy!

What a great story.

Courtney has always liked Mitch. She loves coming home because he greets her with a bear hug. She loves his teasing and teasing him back. When she comes home for the Summer Solstice, her sister convinces her to be in the Meltdown Match, a contest where the sun decides the fate of the couple to be. When Courtney and Mitch are the chosen couple, she spends the entire day with him doing things they both enjoy. By the end of the day, she's convinced the sun did a fine job of matching them together and that they have a future together. But then she learns the truth about the contest and everything falls apart. Can Mitch convince her they really do belong together? Her sister helps her come to a clear understanding also.

Loved this novella by this fun author.

I am a fan of this author, but this offering did not quite reach my standard for a five star story. Nevertheless, this is a well written clean romance that I can recommend to readers of this genre.

Short, sweet, romantic, fun, silly. loving these books from this author. Wish this book was longer because I finished it too quickly. I love the fast track instead of the wordiness I've read in books. Love this book!

Sara Cardon says

I love Rachael's stories and was so excited to read this one. It lived up to my expectations.

Courtney returns to her hometown in Alaska ready to recharge her creative energies before setting off on her next adventure. Her longtime friend Mitch and she get matched for a date, one he's wanted to ask her on for a long time. A few hopes, a few hang-ups, and a few memorable moments can change a lot.

[it doesn't line up with the magical way she wants to see things she gets upset. (hide spoiler)]

Another fun read from Anderson. Mitch is such a likeable guy I don't know how he had the patience not to have acted sooner to show his interest, but it worked out--with a few bumps along the way.

You know, it's totally unfair to heroines everywhere when the heroes of our romance novels are as swoony as Mitch. I mean, patient, kind, creative, playful AND he has a great house. But wait, I got ahead of myself. Courtney is a writer and also somewhat superstitious. She believes her inspiration for her novels comes from returning home to Alaska. She then goes to the location of the book to finish it. Mitch lives in her hometown and is just waiting for Courtney to decide to stay. There is an adorable tradition in their hometown that matches up single guys and gals during "Solstice Days" which is exactly the time that Courtney is visiting. Mitch sees a window of opportunity and decides to help things move along with Courtney. (We now resume our love fest of Mitch - and what's her name) I loved both of these characters. They are likable, down to earth, and normal. The plot of this novella is fresh and cute. I even looked online to see if there was such a thing as a "meltdown match". (please be gentle when you call me gullible) This is a smile on your face, made my afternoon, quick read. Loved it.

I was excited this novella was released as a standalone. I love all of Rachael's books and I'm convinced she can do no wrong. Full review to come.

Easy and quick romance novella. Some structural and grammatical errors, but nothing that hinders the reading. Though the story is too short to get invested in the characters, the plot is cute and enjoyable.
