Picnic in Eden Martha Moffett

After Molly's extravagantly handsome husband squanders their money and drifts out of her life, she faces ruin until an art dealer makes her an offer. If he can hang paintings in her Park Avenue apartment for private clients, he will pay her well. "All you have to do is put out the sherry." Molly is drawn into a dangerous game of stolen art, faked paintings, and real masterpieces.

Stacy says

I won this book as a FirstRead.

After stay-at-home mom Molly's husband leaves her, she has few marketable skills but needs to come up with a way to pay for her rent-controlled apartment and other living expenses. Gordo, the best friend of Molly's husband, introduces her to a man who offers to pay her thousands of dollars a month just to display artwork in her apartment for potential customers. Desperate, Molly agrees, entering a world where it seems, the less she knows, the better.

I really enjoyed reading the story; it was unique premise. I would have liked to see a little more closure on how things worked out for each character after the major incident at the end of the book. Maybe there could be a sequel about Marcus and John Wren? :)

One of the best books I've read this year --- I want to recommend it to everyone. It is truly one of the best self-pubs I've read.

The book itself isn't on GR, but my review over at InD'Tale is here

It's worth the time it takes to track it down. :)

InD'tale Magazine says

Ms. Moffett's tale of love, deception and betrayal is woven in crisp, elegant prose and is much more complex than it first appears.

Read full review in the 2012 October issue of InD'tale Magazine.

Mike Hartner says

Ms. Moffett brings the love of New York's East side, mystery, and a new twist to an old Romeo&Juliet style to bear in this book. This book is a breath of fresh air in a world of stodgy old cigar mysteries.

Everyone should have a chance to experience Ms. Moffett's writing.

This is one Picnic in Eden that won't be forgotten any time soon.
Well done.
