Millionaire Under the Mistletoe Stefanie London

Not the typical read from Stefanie London... still very much a romance though.

Stefanie's own grief for her Nonno (grandfather) definitely comes across in the way that Stella's grief is written. I'm still struggling to find a way to put my thoughts into words a week after finishing it.

I must say that for an experienced romance reader, I didn't see the twist in this story coming. The twist definitely fit the story though

I received an ARC from the author in return for an honest review.

Christmas themed books are usually a miss for me as they are heavy on the melodrama and healing power of Christmas. This book is a light, sweet story set at Christmas and not overpoweringly Christmas themed, so would suit someone like me.

Letting Go

Stella promised her grandfather on his deathbed that she'd spend one more month and Christmas at the estate before deciding what to do with it. She hates the cold and would rather spend this time surfing at home in Australia instead of England.

Evan wants to convince Stella to sell her family's estate to him. Everything he knows about the hotel business is because of Nicholas, he wants to fix it, but also personally cares about the property where he grew up too.

Although Stella still finds Evan attractive, she has absolutely NO intention of selling the estate to Evan. He crushed her once and she refuses to give him a chance. He challenges her to a bet with the estate being the prize. Can he convince her, or will he lose his chance? Stella has grown into a sexy, beautiful woman, which makes her even more tempting than she used to be. What will Stella decide to do? What happens between Stella and Evan? You'll have to read MILLIONAIRE UNDER THE MISTLETOE to find out. I enjoyed the feisty banter between them. They both have life lessons to learn before they can let go of their pasts to live for the future. I received an ARC via IndieSagePR and Entangled Publishing through NetGalley in exchange for an honest review. Due to sexual situations, this book is recommended for readers 17 and older!

Stella Jackson returns to her grandfather's estate upon his last wishes, to settle his estate. When a childhood crush stands between severing the past and setting roots, what will she do?

Evan Foss can't get Stella out of his mind. One night created such a rift between him that it will take all his willpower to just be near her. What will she do when she discovers that he really does have feelings for her?

Enjoy this winter romance of holidays, hope, love and sizzle. Anything Stefanie writes has the magical blend of all and this book was fabulous! It is the perfect addition to your holiday reading!

Okay, I said I wasn't going to read any Christmas books until November. Call me lazy, but I wanted something to read on my phone so I didn't have to put the light on and disturb DH and this was the first thing that caught my eye.

This is a pretty classic reunion trope, with heiress Stella Jackson going back to England to her grandfather's estate to fulfil a vow to spend a month there before deciding whether to sell. Only trouble is that Evan Foss, the boy who rejected her so humiliatingly four years ago is going to be there. He's been maintaining the property since Nicholas Jackson died and wants to buy it.

Evan came from a tough background and owes everything to Nicholas so young Stella was technically off limits for a guy who didn't believe in love and commitment.

I received an ARC from Netgalley for an independent review.

Stella has some hangups too, caused by her selfish mother and her ex-fiance. And especially Evan. It's his rejection that really impacted and she is definitely not going to trust a guy who was obviously all about himself.

The progression of the romance, that includes lots of smexytimes is pretty predictable, but is told in a very engaging way, allowing us to watch the layers being peeled from both lonely Stella and closed off Evan.

There was a twist that you kind of guessed was coming without knowing what it was. The end was touching. I did get a tear but as it was not about the romance, it didn't push up the score.

Sissy's Romance Book Review says

Millionaire Under the Mistletoe by Stefanie London is the story of Stella Jackson and Evan Foss. Stella was once in love with Evan but he turned her away that left her embarrassed and hurt. So Stella has been set on avoiding him ever since. But now she is having to return to stay on the estate that her Grandfather left to her. The condition of his last request was for her to stay there during Christmas. Evan too has feeling for the estate has his mother worked there. But the only thing Evan thinks he wants fro Stella is that estate but the more he is around he the more that might not be the case.

Evan does come of at first as really harsh but it does even out and ends well.

Second chance Christmas romance set in England with a bet thrown in for good measure!

Millionaire Under Mistletoe is my first time reading a book by this author but I really enjoyed it (and actually even thought the author was English/British with how accurate she captured the settings and tones of the characters). This is a second chance Christmas romance an Australian woman and a sexy Englishman whose lives have been intertwined for years since they met when younger. The book also includes a bet theme between the two characters which twists the book even further.

Told from dual points of views, Evan and Stella have such an incredible attraction right from the moment they meet up again, even if they try to hide it given the motives that are leading these two back to each other. Both characters were likeable and strong, but vulnerable too, and what starts off as a temporary romance soon turns into more as they grow closer and things heat up in the bedroom. Evan has such a soft side underneath his tough exterior, as does Stella, which is what makes these two perfect for each other as they find security, love and happiness in each other after failing to fully experience that in their pasts.

Millionaire Under Mistletoe is a well written Christmas themed romance that is perfect to read especially at this time of year (coming up to Winter). The book is fairly fast paced as it takes place over only a couple of weeks but given the history the two share, it worked well. This can definitely be read as a standalone and has a HEA ending for Evan and Stella.

I would definitely recommend this second chance Christmas.

I love Christmas stories and this one is a beauty loved the setting an English estate close to Christmas cold a bit of snow around and a couple that are both lonely in their own ways they had been friends growing up but Evan had hurt Stella and now that Stella is back in England after the death of her beloved Grandfather and she now has something that Evan really wants and Stella is determined not to give it to him sit back and enjoy this rocky path to a very moving HEA.

Stella Jackson is an only child loves her job and surfing and her home town of Brisbane Australia she is not fond of the cold and although she spent a lot of time in England growing with her grandfather it was always summer when she was there but sadly she has a task that her grandfather has requested be done and she is back in England and it is cold, and when she meets up with her old friend Evan the one person who she was always drawn to but the one person who hurt her, but you know that spark between them is still there even after what happened between them.

Evan Foss is a millionaire self made and is also grieving for his mentor Stella's grandfather Evan is English through and through and now he wants the Jackson estate to work with can he win Stella over and get it? They used to be good friends not these days but both have always strived on a challenge so a bet is made may the best man win and Evan is determined to win and along the way that heat between them gets stronger.

This is a very moving and sensual story friends to lovers both determined to stay single after what they have been through but there are also secrets to uncover unknown to them and a love that grows stronger as they journey a very up and down path to a beautiful HEA. MS London never fails to bring out the strength and love between a hero and heroine and this one had me smiling thank you for another great story.

Mindy Lou's Book Review says

3.5 Stars!

This is not a light and sweet Christmas story like I was expecting. This turned out to have quite a lot of angst between the MC's and in the beginning I did NOT like Evan. He was cold and only out for himself.

Stella, who's been in love with him since they were young was rejected by Evan when they were in college. She felt humiliated and hasn't spoken to him since. They are brought back together due to her grandfather's passing and asking her to spend a month at his estate he is leaving to her. Evan also grew up at the estate since his mom was an employee there and later Stella's Grandfather mentored Evan. Evan is set on buying the estate from her and will not let anything get in his way.

This story started out rough for me because Evan was a hard character to like. He couldn't see past himself to even recognize that Stella was important to him. Like Christmas Scrooge, it took almost losing everything to wake him up and see what was right in front of him. Despite the rough start, this had a beautiful ending!

Rating 3.5/5

This is a second chance romance involving a wealthy heiress and the self-made millionaire she knew as a teenager. She was brought up in Australia but her roots are back in England. When her paternal grandfather was dying, she promised to spend a month in his home which she inherited from him. She'd spent summers there when she was growing up and has happy memories of the people and place. She also has memories of being rejected by Evan Ross, someone whose Mum worked on the estate and who her grandfather mentored and guided. Now Evan wants to buy the estate from her but his rejection of her when she was eighteen really upset her, especially as she'd had a secret crush on him for years and felt isolated, unable to relate to her peers and rejected by her mother. Now she's had additional relationship difficulties and is determined to protect her heart from further pain but will either of them be able to ignore the attraction between them? Will their pasts prevent them giving love a chance?

This story is set in England during December. The characters are well developed with very different but still traumatic pasts which influence their relationships with others dramatically. There are some great secondary characters - especially Matt and Ethel (and no, they aren't a couple!) It is an enjoyable second chance romance in a festive English countryside and London.

Thanks to the publishers and NetGalley for gifting me an ARC of this novel. This is my honest review.

Thoroughly enjoyable read! The last place Stella Jackson wants to be is back in England face to face with the one man who has broken her heart. Dealing with the death of her grandfather is hard enough. Dealing with Evan Foss on top of that is sheer torture. All Evan wants is the estate Stella's grandfather left her and he's willing to pay handsomely for it. Unfortunately he knows that their past will keep her from selling to him until it's dealt with. The fact that she is now stunning and as sexy as ever makes it even harder to deal with the past and not want more from her now. Getting past the walls she has erected will be difficult, not wanting to pick things up where they left off all those years ago - impossible.

This is one I definitely recommend.

This book could not have come at a better time. It was the perfect pick me up for last week :)

I think I've pretty much loved every book Stefanie London has written that I have read and this was no exception. This was a beautiful story of letting go, moving forward, growth and lots and lots of heart. I pretty much smiled my way thru the entire thing. There's not really a wow factor to the story but it's also not cliche, maybe a little predictable, yes, but Stella and Evan were such great characters that it felt fresh to me. It's a good holiday themed story. #TRUTH

Smut Matters says

Heather's review from Smut Matters
Stella Jackson's beloved grandfather recently passed away, leaving her his London estate. He requested that she go back and spend one month there, one final Christmas before selling it, if that's what she decides to do. That's exactly what she'd going to do; she lives in Australia and has no intention of giving up her warm weather and early morning surfing for cold, rainy, dreary London.

Evan Foss is on his way to the same estate. He grew up there, Stella's grandfather acting as a surrogate grandfather to Evan, and now he needs to convince Stella that he's the right buyer for the estate.

Stella may resent having to be in London for Christmas instead of surfing, but I can't deny I find the prospect of heading to London extremely enticing right now. So I had a little trouble drumming up as much sympathy for her as I would usually have. But that's my own issue. This book was all the things I love most in Stefanie London's books. It was sweet and charming, but there's are underlying deeper themes being explored and more to Stella and Evan than is immediately apparent. They have a history, having grown up together on the estate and it informs every one of their interactions. Stella has some issues she's been trying to work through, and being thrown back into her childhood home with her childhood crush is bringing them all back up to the surface.

Evan's been fighting his own demons, and he thinks that getting this estate will be the final piece to realizing his dreams and finally being the man he's always wanted and the man Stella's grandfather thought he could be and wanted him to be. To that end, he's willing to do whatever it takes to convince Stella to sell it to him.

Neither of them have the time or interest in a relationship, especially one with so much pre-existing baggage, and double especially not with someone who lives so many time zones away. But, as we knew would happen, fate has other plans, and they find themselves very much embroiled in what is, by all appearances, a relationship.

Stefanie London has once again created a charming, sweet story that sucked me in right away. There was obviously a little more to everything than what the surface showed, and I really enjoyed finding out everyone's secrets. I had a little trouble warming up to both Evan and Stella, but I got there eventually. And, frankly, I'm not going to put that on Stefanie London because this week was a pretty big shitshow here in the U.S. and everything has been discombobulated and topsy-turvy and nothing was as it should be. I have no way to know if I would have felt that way under other circumstances, so I'm not blaming her for something that may not even exist.

Bottom line - if you're looking to up your holiday romance quotient, if you need a fun, charming story to help you escape the garbage fire we're all currently dealing with, if you're just looking for a good book, pick this one up. Then go up pick the rest of Stefanie London's stuff. You can't go wrong with her.
