This book was very disappointing. I felt like some of the story line was taken from "The Shack" - I loved that book...but please come up with something more original...the writing was not compelling. and the book was hard to even finish! Several theological problems in my opinion as well. I wanted to like it - I kept trying - but it just didn't work for me.

Engaging but a bit weird. At each stage of the book I was reminded of The Shack. They are similar books in my view - encounters with God as a result of trauma or experience. I have some theological issues with The Barista - specifically where he speaks of Jesus being 'created'. I did find some of the conversations helpful (as I did with The Shack) because they challenge my views or understanding of how God works.

Loved it! Excellent reading, though not a fast paced book it is appropriate for the subject matter.

At first I really was interested in the story then by chapter seven it started getting odd for me personally I was getting confused as to where this story was going. However by chapter ten I was back into the book and by the end of the book I really discovered that this was a good read.

I love this book. Its an awesome inspirational book about a man journey and walk with God's desire. "We must not only believe in Him, but we must also follow Him as He desire" Learn how to walk in his Desire, you will be blessed.

I enjoyed this book from start to finish. I liked the main character, George and I felt that I could relate to some of his feelings on church and religion. I laughed a lot at the beginning of the book. I thought that there was a lot of humor at the beginning of the story, because of George's views on churches. The Barista was a very inspirational story and I think the writer did a great job with the book. I look forward to reading more from him.

I partially read this book once before and have re-read the entire volume at the request of the author. The title and cover first pulled me in, and as it went along I found myself making small comparisons to "The Shack". Overall I am not a fan of a good deal of dialogue in what I read, but it was the most effective way to tell this particular story. I found it to be pretty deep and I often paused for a couple of days to think about what I'd read. For non-believers, I think it will provoke some self-evaluation. For believers, I think it will do the same, but for different reasons. Where do I stand? What do I believe? Why do I believe what I believe? If nothing else, this could be a conversation starter or be an encouragement to get your Bible out and start searching.
