Don't Look M.J. O'Shea

Christian and Sean met when they were just kids and had been in love ever since. Together, they planned a long happy life with each other. When Christian was diagnosed with terminal cancer at twenty-two, they fought for his life but despite his youth and strength he succumbed to the disease.

Two years later, Sean is still struggling with overwhelming sadness and Christian, who pleaded with higher powers to be allowed to watch over his love, hates watching helpless as his partner spirals into dark depression.

He is granted the ability to go to Sean at night and try to comfort him and make him happy once more. Only he must not tell Sean who he is and can never let Sean or any other human see his face. He must come up with another way to let the grieving Sean know that he's kept his promise.

That no matter what they would always be together...

Robert says

A short, heart-tugging tale of true love. May require keeping tissues handy when reading.

Riina Y.T. says

Don't Look is pretty emotion packed! Wonderful writing that just gets you.....

Not sure how to rate this. I enjoyed the beginning, and thought there was a great story, but the ending threw me for a bit of a loop. Christian and Sean are deep in love, but Christian ends up dying and becoming an "angel" or ghost like character. I know there aren't many ways for an HEA with one person alive and one person dead, so there is a huge challenge there. They get their HEA, so yay for them, but it seemed a bit weird and sad for me (Although I can totally understand how the ending happened). I'm sorry-I know I don't make much sense, but I don't want to give anything away.

This was so short but so sweet and heartbreakng. I had tears in my eyes at the sadness of the beginning and again at the happy/sadness of the end. It was one of those stories that sunk into my heart right away and didn't let go until the end. Christian and Sean are beautiful boys and I'm glad they have each other. Wonderful short story.

Exina says

Started good, the story dragged me in, but things got weird when Christian began to "help" Sean. Help in what exactly??? Not moving on, that's for sure.

I hated the way it ended, it is just awful and creepy and hopeless.

See Pia's review for details.

Josephine says

This story reminds me a bit of that of Cupid's and Pysche's love story (just the part where Sean can't look at Chris' face). This is such a heart-wrenching story.

I love it!

Pia Veleno says

No, no, no. I'm so not happy with this story.

I was hopeful -- I like angels, even if the guardian angel was a dead lover -- but he messed up big time. When a guardian angel encourages his surviving lover to stay in the past, there's something seriously wrong with that situation. No, I suspect he didn't do it on purpose, but it still happened. Instead of cuddling with the man every night, and giving hints about who he is, the angel should've been encouraging him to heal and move on.

So, because the angel (and the surviving lover) clings to the past neither one of them could have back, his surviving lover back slides instead of heals. The angel has to kill him to resolve the story. Kill him!

I'm sorry, but this is romance, so I expect at least an attempt at character and/or relationship growth. To just give up... not a story for me.

M'rella says

Bittersweet. Perfect.

Arch Bala says

Awwee. Sad and sweet. An M.J. classic.

You cannot go wrong with M.J.'s old stories.

Tj says

Sad but sweet. Short read but still makes you feel:)
