Shaylee Roberts says

I liked this early reader because it constantly repeated "woof woof". Once the student sounds out the word, having this repetition increases their ability to recognize the word "woof", and also gives students a confidence booster after reading some hard words. The illustrations are nice as well.

Angel Lederhause says

biscuit made new friends in the big city.

James Jones says

It's written by Alyssa Satin Capucilli and it's not the Satin that made bad choices and yelled out that he wants to do it and he lied about he'll do good stuff but he did not and Jesus said that he would go to earth and die for us.

Biscuit and the girl's dad and the girl went to the big city and Biscuit met lots of friends and they saw lots of big towers. And Biscuit saw lots of pigeons and and found the fountain. He ran past the fountain to their friend's Jack's Snacks place and ran off to there which they were looking for. The bird said "Coo, coo!". Biscuit said "Woof, woof!" after Jack gave him a hot dog and Biscuit shared it with one of the grey birds.

Holly Letson says

The words "in the big city" over and over were redundant and got annoying to keep hearing.

I liked this one a lot. I think even more than my mom. I had her read it again right after the first time reading it. I like when Biscuit says Woof woof - my mom has me say that part. Cute story

Dolly says

This is another fun and easy Beginning Reader book in the Biscuit series by Alyssa Satin Capucilli and Pat Schories. These books are short, with simple and repetitive narratives and the illustrations are adorable. Our youngest loves that she can read these stories all by herself.

Here is what Cameron (6) has to say about Biscuit:

"[The book] is super cute! I'm sad that I'm too big for it now, but other kids will like it a lot!"

We are getting rid of her Biscuit books, so we decided to give it one last whirl. Very cute, and I'll definitely remember it as one of the "bedtime favorites" for both of my siblings (now 12 and 6).

Loren says

I liked this book because it is about adventures and I like adventures, and it is about dogs (I like dogs). It is also about the city, and we live in the city. The lesson is not to wander off because you might get lost.

Capucilli, A. S., & Schories, P. (2006). Biscuit visits the big city. New York, NY: HarperCollins.

Biscuit is a fun, lovable puppy that is in for an adventure. Biscuit visits the city with his family. He has never been to the city before and spies quite a few different things. He sees tall buildings, is scared by honking cars and makes friends with some pigeons. This is an adventure that Biscuit will not forget.

This story is part of the Biscuit series. This series has been around for decades and proves to be a winner for most beginning readers. Biscuit tends to have small, simple sight words and repetitive text that allows emerging readers to increase their reading confidence. The text is large, clean cut and easy to read. The illustrations are cute, playful, and easily attract young readers. The illustrations support the text which will aid beginning reader. Most children age 3-5 years will be attracted to the front cover which has a picture of Biscuit being intrigued by a pigeon. This is a quick read for most.

Rosa Cline says

Biscuit books are a favorite of my granddaughter; we've been reading them since she was about 6 mths old or so. Biscuit is a puppy and his little girl are the two main characters. These books are a "My First Reader" book so most of the time all the books only have maybe a selection of up to maybe 10 different words. But they always have "Woof" as Biscuit talks to his girl. So if you have a beginning reader they would be able to recognize this word from book to book.

In this book Biscuit is taken to what looks like New York City (although the book only says 'city')

Introducing children to things in the city that they may otherwise never have seen. Also teaching that they must listen to keep from getting into trouble.

Carolyn Jeziorski says

Biscuit and the little girl are in the big city. The preschool and PreK kids I read to love the Biscuit books, as they like to bark along with him. The city is quite busy and Biscuit has a lot to explore. I feel this story isn't quite as engaging as some of the others in the series.

Linda Lioun says

I read it while I was observing in ms.hadeel's class they were arranging their folders .

Kalley the Chipmunk says

I read this by myself! My favorite part was when he met all the other puppies

Zoey the Squirrel says

I read this myself for my summer homework.

Becky B says

Biscuit and his owner visit the big city and Biscuit makes some new friends.

I like that this did perspective very well. It really looks at a big city from the perspective of a little girl and a dog. The emphasis is on the city being very tall, noisy, and filled with pigeons and people to meet. Beginning readers get to practice reading the noises that dogs and pigeons make, which both happen to feature the oo sound.
