Alpha Possessive Heroes says

I'm a sucker for second chance romance, so I took the chance on this book and glad I DID!

This is my first read from this author and I liked the story very much! Yes, there were few typing errors and unbelievable situations but that didn't dampened how I feel about this book!

The author did a great job with the main characters.. Neela was a little doormat but eventually became a strong, kick ass independent heroine! I also liked Caleb despite all the shitty things he did specially when he (view spoiler) grrrrr! I hated, hated him for that! He was stupid and I wanted to smack the hell out of him! lol

The ending was a little abrupt. It was like everything was bundled and resolved too fast but overall this is a good read and I will be keeping tabs on A.B. Ewing's book.

Much better than the ratings suggest!

I was able to accept this story because the writer did a great job of letting the audience know what motivated the characters, and I think that's important in helping readers not become frustrated with characters. I think it was a good plot but I do wish everything didn't happen so fast...but I guess that would call for a longer story....Overall, I enjoyed it.

Emotional Reads says

Okay, this little spoiled brat of man child went and slept with a woman he was friends because he was mad at his wife for the stupidest reason. She did spilt something or the other on an important client and he was convinced she did it on purpose, not even listening to her explanation, I don't even care, there is no reason in the world to cheat on your spouse, get a damn divorce first, the woman he slept with somehow got the pictures and sent it to his wife the next day, she ends up leaving, many years later they met up again because she was in a car accident, the car happened to be in front of the car he was driving.

This book is called, Winning Back His Wife, but What exactly did he do to win her back, nothing, not a damn thing. He didn't try to find her after she left, he had the money and resources, obviously he didn't miss her or want her back as much as he claims. some might say she could have contacted him. but why? He is the one who messed up, the one who tore the family apart, it was on him to make the first move. He never once tried to find her, obviously he knew her best friends and knew she would go there, the jerk.

This woman was taking smack from him and his mother and he never once stood up for her, when they first married, she was getting hell from them both. If he had a problem with the way she is about certain things then he shouldn't have married her.

Then when she is back in his house because of medical reasons, they jumped into bed, very quickly I might add, he tells her, the woman he slept with had a baby by him, which wasn't true, but he cared more about keeping a promise to that whore than giving his wife a peace of mind. He would betray his wife in a heart beat, but not the slut he slept with, the one who sent those pictures and destroyed his marriage, tearing his wife's heart out.

The whore turned up at their home and explained everything to her. Why is that so great? It's not, it shows even after his wife left him he was still in contact with her, keeping her secrets, but had no problem ripping his wife's heart out. If I were his wife I would have slammed the door in that slut's face.

I hate when authors do that, having the heroine talking to the woman the so called hero betrayed his wife with, that's an insult, almost like a slap in the face. It's like she is telling the wife, yeah even after you left him for sleeping with me, he kept me in his life. I can't even stand when any hero or heroin keep their ex around, like what happened in another book I read, that hero was taking dating tips from his ex wife on how to win the heroine. No thanks.

This subject matter is too sensitive, too emotional to rush, nothing was resolved between the leads as far as I'm concerned. I can't see a HEA here, because the problem was never resolved. The slut explained that her baby wasn't the hero's and she decided to forgive him after she already had sex with him, the adultery was washed under the rug. Very disappointing. If an author is going to use the adultery thing more time needs be put into it.

This is the most stupid book I ever had the "pleasure " to read . I don't know how I made it to the end and not DNF. I don't recommend this book to anyone .The heroine is a stupid doormat and the hero is an irredeemable asshole. It seems as if the author wanted the book to end a certain way although it made no damn sense .I'm so mad right now .

Good read, short and to the point. This story got right down to it from the very first page. There was no long drawn out explanation about what was going to happen, everything just happened and it was seamless. Neela and Caleb really had a special and pure kind of love. With all the mess they had to endure they persevered and came out on top. The big reveal at the end was unexpected and I actually would like to see how this whole story will end. I hope a sequel is in the works.

Kalyee says

It takes a really talented author to write about a physically and emotionally abusive cheating Hero, and still make the reader believe he deserves a HEA.

This book had potential, and I think, given time and practice, the author could be really great... But she's not there yet.

The dialog was stilted and unnatural and the thoughts/actions of the characters made no sense. Often times I found myself thinking there was no natural motivation behind thoughts/actions, the author wanted the character to do X, so they did, even if it didnt make any sense to the reader.

All in all, I'd say skip this book.

Caleb succumbed to a one stand, his wife Neela could not forgive so she walk away for Caleb , then their second chance come along, its fill with, delicious consequences, passion, steamy seduction, romantic hopefulness, & a cruel twist inside, with a family secret that may deal with their happy ever, great story!

Finding a good book from this genre is like digging for diamond, you have to dig through a lot of filth to find the price. Here, however, there was only filth. Where do we go with this story, when the main heroine, a black Trinidadian woman, let some pathetic excuse of a man belittle her race, and her background. He called her stupid, ignorant and he was ashamed of her. He put her down in front of his family, and friends. Neela should have left him before he cheated on her. I really hate it when the women are so thankful for men who are mentally, and physically abusive of them. The women on the other hand, are just grateful because all these hot and rich men want them.

It is ok to write about flawed heroes because reality is filled with them, but at least makes the women strong and dignified enough to stand up for themselves. After five years Neela is still a doormat, despite the fact that she has her children to think of now. She still jumps into bed with Caleb like a hormone crazed adolescent, after five years. Before this, the writer fails to establish any form of connection or passion between them. The two leads could have been two strangers throughout the whole book. Caleb was the worst kind of character, he was hateful, and unforgivable. Lori and Caleb should have been together, at least they had chemistry, seeing how he continuously slept with the woman. This was a horrible book.

Reine D says

I'm trying really hard not to DNF this book. Am I the only person who is perplexed about how she regained the use of her legs? I mean that is the main reason that she is in the house. This is a major part of the plot... I don't even want to comment on the protagonists...I did not enjoy this book. This may be my first DNF ever...

Rgreader says

A Winning Back His Wife is a second chance at love romance.

Hero meets heroine and quickly falls in love and marries her. Drama follows leading to the hero cheating.

The drama had me hooked. I wanted to see how the heroine reacted to it. That worked.

What didn't work was the lack of heroine point of view. I didn't feel that romantic connection between the hero and heroine. His thoughts weren't enough to make the insta-love believable.

Because the hero cheated I read on to see if the HEA was possible. The author did a good job of showing the hero being a changed man. His groveling lasted a good amount and was very convincing.

Lori continued to be an issue between the two of them. He and Lori remained friends and Neela made no attempt to hide her dislike of the other woman.

After every fight he would find himself searching out Lori.

“Maybe my mother was right. Maybe I should have never married you. You don’t fit in.”

“Well maybe you should have married Lori. I’m quite sure your family would have loved that.” She flung at him.

“Maybe I should have. At least she knows what is expected in a wife.” He stepped forward, unable to curb his need to hurt her, verbally lashing out in anger. That shut her up.

Neela hadn’t allowed him close to her in two weeks so it didn’t take very long with the alcohol in his system for him to be fully aroused. Lori looked up from where she was kneeling between his legs, her eyes were clouded with heat.

Screw it! Neela didn’t give a damn about him so why the hell should he refuse what Lori was offering.

Leaning forward he took her lips in his and gave himself up to the desire that engulfed him.

Last night he had been so angry at Neela he didn’t think twice about sleeping with Lori.

Five years ago he had made it quite clear what he thought of her. Would her children suffer the same fate? Would they too, be an embarrassment to him?

Now all he had to do was figure out how the hell he was going to explain about Lori. He had no idea what Neela would do when she found out about the baby.

“Neela, Lori has a son. He’s just six months old. His name is Craig.”

She stiffened. He could see her trying to prepare herself for what she knew was coming next.

“Neela... Craig is my son.” Caleb delivered the final blow. And there in her eyes he could see her heart shatter into a million pieces.

“You bastard! You unfaithful, lying bastard! Don’t you ever say that to me! Don’t ever say you love me.”

I want a divorce. If you want a family you can have it with your whore and your bastard.

“How do you think Lori? I had to tell my wife that I had a six month old son with the same woman I committed adultery with.”

“Caleb, you betrayed me in a way that almost destroyed me. You lied to me, and you kept secrets from me. It took me years to even begin to recover from what you did.”
