Mr. Plum Sue Brown

Dave picks up coffee every morning at the train station on his way to work. He can't help but notice when the man in front of him is given a plum-colored cup holder, as it goes perfectly with his own tie. There are other things he can't help but notice, like how hot "Mr. Plum" is.

When Mr. Plum hands over a cup of coffee, exactly how Dave likes it, the morning he's late getting to the station, it's the start of a beautiful friendship. Or is it?

Now this was a cute little read. I must admit, the first thought that went through my head was the game Clue for a minute (yes, his name was Professor Plum, but Mister is pretty close). I liked how it was the telling of how they first met and getting a glimpse of the beginning of their relationship and later on when they're happily together. Mister Plum was enjoyable and a nice, short read that I would definitely recommend. It's short and sweet, a bit of a pick-me-up for anyone who needs one.

Okay, so sweet. Love this author and I'm definitely going to look for more.

Chris says

Sweet short m/m romance about two guys who always see each other at the same coffee shop and then in the train station before their morning commute. I love this cover.

Elayne says

This is a short story, with a slow build up and a lovely relationship build. It's warm and fuzzy and I loved it!

Lauren says

3.5 stars but rounded up to 4 :) This was a short and incredibly sweet romance. It's a great little comfort read and perfect if you're looking for something quick, angst free and adorable.

Sadonna says

Cute short story of the meeting of a couple. Thank goodness for Kai the barista giving them a bit of a shove :P

Cute, short read!

Julie Bozza says

A pleasant short story about two guys meeting during their morning commute, with some well-observed 'real life' details of how they first notice each other, overcome various barriers, and gradually find their way to the inevitable conclusion. Both coffee and colours played significant parts in the story, so it was always going to appeal to me!

Cute short easy read about two guys who get to know each other as they commute every day by train and buy their morning coffees from the coffee shop on the station. The pleasure comes from watching them go from relative strangers to lovers as they bond and discover things about each other over their daily journey to work. Not the most action filled of stories but it's a pleasant romance that fills a corner nicely and gives you a nice dose of sweet (without too much sugar)romance! likeable!

Elsbeth says

This was kind of a hot mess, most of it didn't click with me.
The little bit of sentimental in the end made me smile though.

Arch Bala says

This short story reminds me so much of the “First Impressions” shorties by Josephine Myles but in a less charming way. I thought there should have been more background about the MCs since the coffee shop premise is just too cute and it just need more stuff to make the characters more relatable. Nonetheless, it's just a very short story so there's not much really to fuzz about. I guess it's pleasant enough, is all I'm saying

Rating: 3 out of 5 stars

I won my copy of this book and no review was required, but I gotta tell you about this book!

Another addition to the Too Stinking Cute shelf, and I really rather loved it. Its only short, some 30 odd pages, but its so deliciously sweet!

Tom will tell the story of his and Dave's relationship with the beginning in the launderette. But Dave will tell you, it goes back far before then, to a cup of coffee in a paper sleeve that matched Tom's tie.

Even though only Dave has a say, and Tom doesn't get a word in, at all, I still enjoyed it.

Its very written, and you connect to both Dave AND Tom really well, for such a short book. I didn't spot a single spelling mistake or editing errors.

Sue Brown in a new to me author, and this was a perfect introduction to her work.

Fabulous little hangover cure, if ever there was one.

4 solid stars

I just love Ms. Brown's characters! grin

Even if the story doesn't work for me, which it did in this case, I just want to hug her characters and take them home with me... although, I guess you could say that I already have! hehehe

This was a cute, fun read that left a smile on my face and a shared love of the color plum! My spare bedroom is done in three different shades of my favorite color of plum! Dave would love it... but probably not so much the floral prints on the wall! snort LOL!!!
