April returns home from her trip down to Earth unhappy with what she accomplished. Papa-san Santos is finishing her rescue of the Lieutenants, Her traitorous brother is dead, and so many things are uncertain. The Chinese and North Americans both continue to give her and Home a hard time. But April, Jeff, and Heather are gathering allies and power. China, trying to steal Singh technology, gets its hand slapped badly by Jeff, and the Patriot Party in America is damaged, but not gone. Their project on the moon is not so easy for North America to shut down, especially with the Russians helping. Heather proves able to defend it forcefully. They really didn't know she owns a cannon. The three have their own bank now, Home is growing, and April is quickly growing up into a formidable young woman, worthy of her partners.

Quality Writing!!

This is a very exciting series. Lots of humor added to a bunch of action. Mackey Chandler is gifted with a prolific mind

New and Interesting People

Lunar Realty, Gene Modifications, heavy handed government buttheads and more. You're not going to become bored reading this installment. Hinting of a Beanstalk on Luna, owned by Home Royalty. Thoughts of mining Saturn's rings, on to the next one with great anticipation.

Shane says

Generally a good story. Some parts felt overly drawn out, and other parts rushed. Still in dire need of a good copy edit.

Still curious

The "Papa-san" and "Mama-san" sound a lot more appropriate to the owners of a tavern in Okinawa than a well travelled, sophisticated spy and wife. Again "oriental" is for rugs not people. Ruthless decision making is a pleasure to read but privileged power without consequences is scary.

The economic rants are inaccurate but I think he means well. The boom and bust financial cycle is real but has been graphed at about forty years to the cycle. The characters have no solution to the problem other than to be rich. Together with "We don't need government in a capitalist economy", it's weirdly libertarian. Unfortunately, every brand of that strain of thought is only appealing if you're rich or expect to be.

At least you get a look at how Central and Home came to be. I have trouble with that whole cultural racism tendency.

Captivating story with strong characters. The story allows the reader to suspend disbelief while also exploring some interesting concepts about space, economics and society. Recommended

Thomas Merrick says

Good story

This book ties up some of the poor lines of the first two books. The editing was better in this book and the story still exciting.
