The Morning Tree K.A. Masters

This fairy tale with a twist begins in the naïve, Romantic-style of Hans Christian Andersen, and ends with Lovecraftian madness, necromancy, and revenge. Siblings Henry and Althea are simple peasants whose lives are changed when they rescue an injured elf maiden named Birne from brutal captivity. Their selfless act polarizes the community. As lethal enemies and allies emerge to jeopardize the family's peace, Birne must prove her loyalty with deadly force.

This book I read because of a reading challenge. It's NOT a genre I would normally read. It was an interesting storyline and the end kind of pulled it all together. However, that's were my liking kind of ended. It was choppy, with different story jumping in here and there and wow it was violent but your not so connected to the characters to really feel it. It was weird.

I really enjoyed this story about what influence a good person can have on humanity. Loved the story. A very quick read

This book definitely had an interesting storyline. I liked that it was a fairytale entwined with horror, and the content seems original, nothing that's been overdone. I enjoyed the use of pictures, as well.

I think that this book definitely has potential, but it could use a bit more fleshing out. More character detail, and more conflict between characters...I felt at times that the characters were too agreeable towards each other, issues were too easily resolved.

I also thought the language was very formal, although that could be intentional for the time period.

All in all, this book has a creative storyline but the plot/characters need to be more developed.
