Avid says

Slow and drowning in minutia. Much of this book is focused on the tiny details of life that have absolutely NO CONNECTION to the plotline (e.g., in the very beginning, Kelsey and her parents are driving to her law school and details about the trip, such as buckling seatbelts, are carefully described in such a way that you think the scene is being set for an auto accident. Nope. They're just driving to school. Nothing to see here, folks.) These details don't advance the plot. Rather, they slow the pace of this novel incredibly. I kept waiting for the novel to get to the good part, but halfway through the book, I was still waiting.

The "romance" isn't anything substantial, more like a near miss, and towards the end, when you think something good might happen, the novel ends. Characters are written out and the novel just ends. I was hugely disappointed.

Haley says

I loved this book and have read all of this series just waiting on the new one. I love the dynamics between Kelsey, Tyler, Ryan, and Jessica. The little bit of Zach is nice too. I totally think this series would make an awesome tv show.

Kelsey is starting her first year of law school at Darrow in Seattle. Since she was a little girl she's dreamed of skipping up the steps outside a court house, dressed in a smart suit and carrying a briefcase. If she can only get through the intensity of several years as a student at the best law school in the US, she'll finally be in a position to make her dream come true. It won't be easy: one third of the first year students will fail.

When a book is called 'Billionaire Boys Club' I have certain expectations. Obviously, I expect there to be at least one billionaire, and I also expect romance. This book gets one star for having at least one billionaire, although since each rich boy is born into wealth I'm not certain whether it actually counts. That spooky cover, with the headless guy may have been trying to tell me that there's no actual billionaire hero here at all. There's about zero romance going on here. Kelsey meet cutes her potential love interest at the 30% mark, but I don't rate their chemistry much above friendship. Since this is the first in the series maybe it'll heat up between them at some stage. This was the freebie in the series, so possibly it's just there to get me interested and I'll have to pay if I want the good stuff, but lack of romance isn't this book's only fault: it's just plain boring.

The book starts out with Kelsey and her parents on the ferry from their home town to Seattle. Kelsey's mother is cold and won't come outside. She sends Kelsey's dad out with a hot chocolate for Kelsey. The family get into their car and drive through Seattle to Darrow. They turn left and right on streets and roads. There's a lot of traffic at 3:00 pm. Or maybe, coming from a small town, they're just not accustomed to driving in a big city. It takes half an hour to get from the gates of the college to the campus buildings, with all the other cars dropping off students.

The level of specificity in this book would be chilling ... if it was actually going anywhere. Fiction has taught me that, if you spend time lulling me with a lot of detail, a big devastating plot is about to hit and destroy the protagonist's nicely laid out future plans. I was expecting death. I was expecting trauma, and a sudden jump of three years with Kelsey now working a low paid job and all stuck and sad, until a chance encounter with a handsome stranger started turning her back onto her path to success. Or something like that. Instead, the book just handed me more unrelenting detail. Meeting her roommate. Getting to classes. Getting split into groups. Introductions to the Socratic method. Buying or renting textbooks from Amazon, because they cost $1600 at the campus bookshop. It just went on and on.

There is some plot. It comes under the heading of 'bad things that happen to other people, making them a statistic you occasionally read articles about.' There is almost no characterisation. At varying points in the book Kelsey is embarrassed, angered, frustrated and sorrowful. She doesn't really do anything with these emotions, other than restate her ambition to make it through law school.

I have nothing against reading about college life. I just don't like books where no one is interesting, and nothing interesting happens. For anyone who is planning to go to Darrow, this book might have some useful information. Like: where to find a cupcake bakery, and that it's best to go out for Thai food when its chicken pot pie day in the cafeteria. If this book had been titled 'Starting school at Darrow' it would have been accurate.

* Cliffhanger warning!! ****

I was under the impression this was a romance book but to me, it wasn't at all. It was about kids and their days at law school. Nothing exciting happened, no real plot or twists and even the conversations were a bore. even though it ends as a cliffhanger, I won't bother with going forward.

Cherish Lorraine says

Real

As a former law student, I could relate to the text and found it very believable (but for the mandatory living in dorms thing- that was odd to me). I have never lived in the northwest but I imagine that aspect is probably spot on too. I like the story line and find it to be well written but don't like how slowly the "romance" moves. In all fairness the slowness of the main characters romance does make it more believable and adds to the charm but makes you want to keep buying the next novel to see if they finally hook up and even then it still isn't as fast as you want...

Christine Mcdanal says

Obsessed with jackets

Nearly one third of the way through the book and the love interests have yet to be introduced, yet I know exactly what and how much outerwear each character has, when and if they wear them and when they get hot or cold and need to take them on and off. After one of the characters got excited and hugged her new fleece, I just started skimming the book searching for some sign of a plot, but I gave up.

Anrea says

I only read 49% of the book. It sounded like a romance in the blurb, but so far no romance to be seen or felt. The book just explained how that law school works in very great detail, and that breakfast lunch and dinner was eaten every day. Just really boring.

I went to check some reviews to see if it will get better, but it doesn't sound like it, so I gave up on the book.

Julie says

Great story

This would have had 5 stars except for the fact of the cliff hanger, now, I don't normally complain at a cliffhanger but I was really feeling these characters, I didn't want it to end there, how could it? the story wasn't finished, I really need to know more so I am getting book 2, I really enjoyed this story, it was playing in my head like a movie, which is always a good sign, recommend to anyone who wants a good story but be warned cliffhanger alert.....

Lisa Pate says

Not really worth the time to read

I read this book all the way through searching for the plot and really never found one. As far as the authors writing style I would say it was alright. She goes into great detail describing in detail some of the lecture of the professors and rambling of the main character and her friend.

Kelsey is starting her first year a law but by the the way the characters talked you would have thought they just graduated from high school. I was so tempted to put the book down but for some reason I kept hoping for more.

This is not a romance novel it is a long drawn out story of a young girl's first semester at a very difficult college and the stress it causes. I will not be looking to read this book ever again. I know that is harsh but it was absolutely not my cup of tea.

Beginnings

This was a great start to see how different people both from money and some who go to Law school in scholarship. But Kelsey has dreams, her roommate Jessica is as lost as she is and her friend from college

Dylan is lost also. Then you have the guys who's families are billionaires are all different.

Pam says

The Billionaire Boys Club: Billionaire Romance series Book 1 is by Cara Miller. The series is about young men and women who are attending Barrow Law School in Seattle, Washington. These young people come from all walks of life and from colleges across the nation. Only the brightest are taken as students here. However, the college is definitely expensive so many of the students are among the wealthy, although some are there with financial aid. Will they survive the rigors of Barrow to become lawyers or will they fail? Only the brightest and fiercest survive.

Kelsey North was excited to begin her law classes. She had worked hard to get to Darrow and intended to make the most of the chance. She and her roommate, Jessica Hunter, hit it off from the first and worked well together. Kelsey also knew Dylan Shaw who had gone to Portland State with her, so at least she knew someone. The first day at the dorm, she and Jessica ran into Brandon Martin and Matt Hudson who both were jerks to them. Dylan later told them that Matt was his roommate and that they belonged to a group of five very wealthy young men. The five were Brandon, Matt, Zachary Payne, Ryan Perkins, and Tyler Olsen. Tyler's Mother and Ryan's Father had built a multibillion dollar business together. Brandon, Matt, and Zachary's parents worked for them in one way or another. Their attitudes did not make a good impression on Kelsey and Jessica at first. However, they sat beside them in class and were paired off with them for legal writing. They had to get along or run the risk of failing.

Their first class, Civil Procedures, made them think they were in the wrong place as they didn't understand anything the professor said. Jessica found an outline online which at least gave them a little reference. It also made them more determined than ever to study hard so they could stay at Darrow. In the second class, Jessica and Matt sat beside each other while Kelsey sat next to Tyler, Zachary and Ryan. She thought it would be a long year.

What connections would the eight law students make as they progressed through the year? Which students would end up being picked on by the professors in their individual classes? How many of the 185 students would still be in the class by December?

Pratna Imrith says

This is the first book by Cara Miller and personally I disliked both the writing and the story. Firstly I have no idea why this book is called Billionaire Boys Club because there are no billionaires, but just some spoilt boys who most probably won't inherit their parents fortune. Once you start reading the book, you will find that the male lead characters are only introduced properly half way through the book which is one of the main reasons why the book is unable to catch and keep your attention. The worst part of the book is that there is barely any romance in the story which means the series title Billionaire Romance was misleading. The writing was poor and the characters were not well conceived and I especially felt that there was too much law jargon in the book for the average reader. I really do hope that Cara Miller improves her writing as she has a lot of potential.

Deborah says

The billionaire boys club

This was a surprisingly good story. I've read many billionaire themed novels and this is the first book that had substance/grit. I would have given a higher rating if it had ended with closure regarding the exams and Dylan. I wonder if Dylan returns in the next installment?

Jessica Mae says

Lame

Not my cup of tea... Just so much detail and the description lead me to believe that it would have a happy ending. After everything a character said something it went... Jessica said. Dylan said. Ugh... Definitely could've been better in my opinion.

Sara Jo says

Might have been free but it definitely did not tempt me to purchase anything from this author. An obvious first novel, full of boring and mundane daily descriptions of life. The so called torn between two men was resolved way too quickly and done poorly. Not to mention the fact that the book was written more like a too long prologue than a story.
